Dear Dr. Ahmed,

On behalf of the Board of Directors of the Health Care Incentives Improvement Institute, I would like to congratulate you on the achievement of your Recognition. You join the ranks of several thousand physicians, nurses and physician assistants that have demonstrated an ability to deliver outstanding results in the management of their patients.

There are now many health plans across the country that have embedded Bridges To Excellence Recognitions into their assessment of physician quality, and/or as markers of quality designation in their provider directories. In addition to the benefits from your BTE Recognition you might get from health plans with which you contract, we also have a web site and mobile application, INQUIREhealthcare.org, that offers information to consumers on recognized physicians.

Sincerely Yours,

About the Health Care Incentives Improvement Institute (HCI3):
HCI3 is a non-profit organization, guided by a Board of Directors that includes physicians, employers, health plans, and others. Our goal from the start has been to recognize and reward clinicians who have implemented comprehensive solutions in the management of patients, and deliver safe, timely, effective, efficient, equitable and patient-centered care. As such, BTE/HCI3 does not charge clinicians or receive payment from clinicians for BTE assessment. HCI3 does not profit from the Recognition programs and supports the effort from operating funds as part of its mission to improve the quality and affordability of health care in the US.
